What is a Water-Cooled Manifold?

A water-cooled manifold is an exhaust manifold equipped with cooling water channels to control the high temperatures of exhaust gases. Because exhaust temperatures are particularly high in natural gas engines, water cooling the manifold:

- Prevents cracking or deformation of the manifold,
- Protects nearby components (e.g., turbocharger, EGR valve, sensors) from excessive heat,
- Ensures more stable and safe engine operation.

Water-cooled manifolds are generally preferred for the following purposes in natural gas engines:

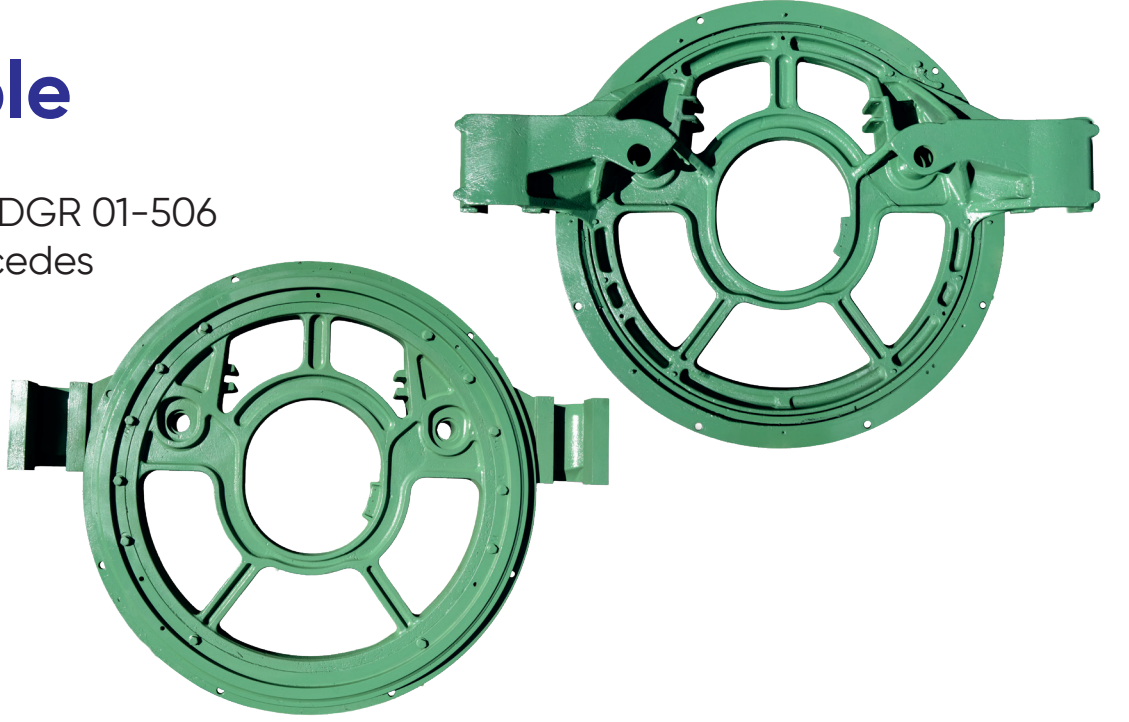

- Heavy-duty vehicles (buses, trucks, generator engines),
- Stationary plant engines (e.g., natural gas cogeneration systems),
- Long-term durability in high-horsepower gas engines.
